Railroads and Canals, Noting, as we have done, the traffic on the Chesapeake and Ohio canal since the opening of the present season, it is to be regretted that results are not entirely satisfactory. Although the demand for Cumberland coal, which constitutes the main reliance of the canal, has not stackened, but increased and is increasing with the widening reputation of the commodity; it is not pleasant to notice that the canal is not deriving the full corresponding benefit. From the periodical reports of the canal delivery at Cumberland it appears that whilst the railroads are carrying away more coal than ever, the canal has been falling behind last year's trade by so considerable a quantity as two thousand tons a week! Thus we are shown that on the 12th of April the Baitimore and Ohio railroad's increase over last year's business to the same date was 117,000 tons, whilst the decrease by canal for the same period was 38,600 tons. Again on the 26th of April the railroad had gone on augmenting its increase up to 125,000 tons, by which time the canal decrease had gone down to 43,000 tons. Furthermore, on the 3d of May inst., the railroad increase appears to have been over 127,000 tons, against a further falling off in canal shipments of 48,300 tons. What the effect of such an exhibit must be on the canal stock, if the same downward course should long continue, requires no Solomon to divine, and no less injurious will it be to the income of the canal which will need to be as large as possible to meet ordinary expenses and the interest on the preferred bonds. Something of this untoward state of things was predicted at the time the tolls were raised, but not. perhaps, to so large an extent or one so early reached. People wondered that when the Baltimore and Ohio road was inviting trade by keeping down its freight charges, the canal directors should seem to repel it by raising

We are sure that the people of Maryland, east, west, middle, or elsewhere, cannot desire the decay of one of their principal public works, notwithstanding others, not quite so public, may be prospering. Because the railroad thrives, no reason is furnished why the canal should droop. Why should Peter be robbed that Paul might become richer? Powerful railroads traverse the territory of other states, but those states do not propose to sacrifice their canals. Pennsylvania and Ohio keep up their state camals, and the Empire state cherishes her great historic work, the Erie canal, like the apple of her eye. Within the last three years she has offered the tempting premium of one hundred thousand dollars for a plan for successfully navigating the canal by steam, and the prize is yet open to a winner. How eager is Virginia to place a Chesapeake and Ohio canal alongside of her Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, although the latter has gone into energetic operation. How then can Marviand afford to relax her care and interest in her canal, now that after the tribulation and struggles of old, it is seen that the canal, if committed to kindly and faithful auspices, will yield a plentiful reward?

railroads and canals; rightly considered there never will be any, if each keeps to its proper functions and destiny. But proofs are plentiful that whilst canals are not monopolies and inmanagement, railroads require restriction and close watching. They undeniably furnish the principal source and opportunity for excessive stockjobbing and corruption. Without them the exploits of the Jim Fisks and Jay Goulds of our era could never have been. "Railroads," says the Hon. Josiah Quincy in his late address On the subject, "have the power to bribe legislatures and to control laws," and it is moreover said of them that they sometimes "become practically monopolies and the tools of avaricious and unscrupulous capitalists, and are used to plunder the public, enrich themselves and impoverish the country through which they run." At first modest and supplicatory, like the Gogmagog of the romance, railroads, by and by, develop a tendency to so grow and swell, as to threaten the rest of the world with sheer expulsion. Against such influences, open or secret, from any and every quarter, it behooves the friends of the particular cause of which we are now writing to be on the alert.

With no disposition to censure, we think that if the present canal board had now for the first time to consider the policy of raising their tolls, that policy would not be adopted. That a mistake has been made is clear from the remarkable fact that, to save their business from further disaster, the boatmen have voluntarily reduced their freight rate five cents per ton !

And there is another matter we hear of, not without regret. It is a great pity that the longsubsisting harmony between the canal company and the numerous millers on the lowest, or Georgetown level could not be maintained. These mills furnish a market for a large part of the canal grain trade; and to quarrel with them and seek to restrict their water privileges, so long enjoyed, is simply to strike at another source of income for the canal. The present is an important juncture in the history of this work, and its friends will need all their industry and good judgment in so managing its affairs, against open or secret foes, as to restore its full prosperity, and commit it to a successful future. to which the late administration of its affairs

Projects for normal and high schools are again being pushed, despite the depleted condition of the school fund, through heavy expenditures for new school buildings, &c. The resources for school purposes are not only unequal to the establishment of high and normal schools, but the wants of our school system are not in that direction. The work needed is really at the base of the structure: the primary schools. Some who have given thought to the matter held that it is so important that the status of the primary scools should be elevated, that they advocate the selection of the most capable and most experienced teachers for these schools. We can afford to wait for high schools until the lower grades, attended by the mass of the children, are brought up to the mark. In the meantime our grammar schools serve very well

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

The Bank of England rate of discount wa advanced to 5 per cent. on Saturday, on account of a reported panicky feeling on the Vienna Bourse and tight rates for money in the German cities. The gold premium advanced fully 1 per cent. in New York, the rate closing at 118%. The stock operators took advantage of the excitement to run down the prices, which were rendered less difficult by a sharp decline of Erie shares in London. Private advices from abroad represent that there is likely to be no more trourepresent that there is likely to be no more trouand it is thought matters will resume their usual course in a week or so. The weekly state-ment of the New York banks is reported as very favorable, showing a gain of nearly two miliions in the legal reserve, making an excess of nearly five millions over the 25 per cent. required by law. Money, consequently, was very easy.

How sad it is to see a young wife, a mother of family who requires all her physical strength to fulfill her household duties, and all her moral cato ruinit ner household duties, and all her moral capacities to accept the responsibility which fails upon ker, to see her prostrated, losing every day her strength, feeling badly without being able to say why, but yet suffering enough to be utterly miserasble! This state of weakness and debility is more fatal to her than a severe spell of sickness, for in that case she will receive the proper care, as in the other she will linger months after months, not thinking worth while to see a physician about it, until nature, exhausted, gives out, and she is carried to the grave, when a little precaution in proper time would have spared her life. To prevent, to strengthen, to cure, nothing can compare with the LONG-LIFE BIT-TERS of Dr. L. G. BERTRAM. They are a safe and infallible remedy against malaria, dyspepsia, costiveness, biliousness, headaches, morning sickness and all complaints peculiar to women. These Bitters, which are sold by all druggists, are, in consequence of their virtue and most agreeable taste, the medicine par excellence for ladies.
